

Organize your Start Screen tiles into groups.

While using the Start Screen, you can organize your tiles by creating groups. Having your apps contained in groups makes it easier for you to quickly find your favorite apps all in one place.

To create a new group, all you have to do is left drag and drop your chosen tiles to the far right (or left) side of the screen, just until a gray vertical bar appears. After you finish moving your chosen tiles, you should have them clustered into a new group.

Then name each group....

To make it easier to organize and view your groups, you can give each group a name. In the end, every group you create will have its name displayed on top of a cluster if you so choose. Naming a group is a simple task. Simply click on a blank space immediately above the target cluster and then enter a name for the group in the name bar that will appear. Now click on any blank space on the Start screen and you will be taken back to the normal screen. If you want to move the entire group to another location on the Start screen, drag the cluster by its name bar and move it to a new location.
